Xycommunity.com is owned by Pomles Ltd. based in Manchester, UK and its aim is to provide the worldwide LGBT community with a powerful online social network forum to allow people to openly connect with one another who have the same views and interests.

How XYcommunity.com was born

On 25th December 2005, a friend and I went out to the park for a walk, we just wanted to feel the fresh air and the breeze. While at the park we saw a lesbian couple who looked like they were in their 50's and appeared to be in love. We stared at the way they related to one another with love. We were so touched, and commented to each other 'how sweet' and how it's so nice to see two people happy and openly connecting together.

It was then we started visualizing what it would be like for the LGBT community to have a powerful online social network where members will voice their opinions, meet their match social connection and express themselves.

When we returned home, we talked about launching an online social networking website that will bring together the worldwide LGBT community in one forum and include businesses and organizations.

We have worked so hard in the last 3 years on this project. It's been hard we must admit we received harsh treatment during the project that inspired us on, we were determined. Finally Xycommunity.com is now ready for members and organisations to join and contribute positively towards its growth.

Pauline`s Story and Testimonial

My name is Pauline. I discovered very late in my life that I was attracted to women. I was in my early forties. I was very confused, shocked, embarrassed, felt abnormal, felt it was wrong to be attracted to the same sex, wanted to be able to discuss my feelings. I didn't have anyone to talk to about this, my friends and parents were not an option.

I started surfing the internet trying to find a networking website where I could meet others in the same situation and discuss my feelings in a safe environment. The sites I found were mostly dating sites without any opportunity to network or make friends with women who were in a similar predicament. All I needed was a friend. I spent a lot of money joining various sites, but did not find what I was looking for. I was very disillusioned and frustrated. I wondered whether I would find a site that would cater for what I needed.

Whilst out shopping I was approached by a woman who was distributing research leaflets on launching an online social networking website for the LGBT Community. She asked me what I thought. I said that was a brilliant idea, a site where people could openly connect with each other. What impressed me was that the website would cater for people looking for friends and that it would be made up of real members and not paid database members.

This website was what I was looking for, a safe and secure website where I would be able to make friends, discuss my feelings and exchange views, opinions. So I joined xycommunity.com and volunteered to help with the website. I have been following the progress of the website and share the founder's dream of having a unified and powerful social networking website which will be recognised worldwide.

In my personal opinion I find xycommunity.com is community orientated, it has allowed me to make friends, it is good value for money, and the cost is nowhere near as much as I paid for being a member of other sites.

I think it is a breath of fresh air, it is clean and has no adult content, it is very appealing and unique. I would encourage anyone in LGBT community to join xycommunity.com. I have and am reaping the rewards of membership.
